The Docker-based API Monitoring System is a lightweight microservices project developed using Docker and Docker Compose. The system consists of an API service and a traffic generator service that continuously sends requests to monitor API performance. It tracks important metrics such as response time, request count, and average processing time for different API endpoints.

The project demonstrates concepts of containerization, microservices architecture, service communication, and persistent data storage using Docker volumes. It helps in understanding how real-world systems monitor application performance and maintain scalable, isolated environments for deployment and testing.
